

very materially affect the case for the prosecution or defense. It is your duty, and within your province, to decide these inquestions, as the law makes you the sole judges of the facts and the credibility of the witness.

The credibility of a witness is comprised of his integrity, means of knowledge, impartiality, conduct and appearance on the stand and regard for his oath.

You have the right to reject the evidence of any and all witnesses, provided you choose to exercise it, yet your duty to society should counsel you not to exercise the right in an arbitrary manner. One credible witness is sufficient to warrant you in finding a guilty or guilty or not guilty verdict.

It is your duty to sustain the law, and if any witness is deliberately and falsely avowing a material statement or number of facts, you should then decide and disregard entirely his evidence as the law holds that a person will do in one instance, he is more than likely to do so in another. Should he, however, be contradicted in one and sustained in another, that either may be relied on. The value of testimony does not depend on the number of witnesses, but on the degree of credit to be attached to it by a jury. Care and circumspection should always be exercised in criminal cases, so far at least that a man shall not suffer otherwise than by due course of law, nor that any hardship or severity be exercised upon him, where the testimony will admit of a reasonable doubt. You are not, however, to be swayed away by your feelings so far as to render the law nugatory and ineffectual, when a proper cause has been made out. You have nothing whatever to do with the character of the deceased as far as the proper administration of justice is concerned. Every man is equally entitled to protection at the hands of his country. No master or master may be a person's antecedents or present condition in community, it is equally respected, as far as life and liberty are concerned, as the highest in the land; and, in the eye of the law, it is as great a crime to murder a vise and degraded being as to murder its greatest ornament. If you have any reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the prisoner, you are to give him the benefit of it. By a doubt, however, you are not to understand a possible or imaginary one—a mere possibility or speculation, it must be actual and well founded, arising from the evidence; it must be such a doubt as, upon the whole case, will leave your minds in that condition that you can conscientiously say the defendant is guilty to a moral certainty.

The Jury retired at 31 o'clock. At 11 o'clock they had not agreed upon a verdict, and were locked up for the night.
